ERB Reviews 4.0 out of 5 stars Great for my parents who aren't tech savvy so we can share photos remotely. One con photos seem to run through the slideshow in the order they are received. There is no random shuffling of the photos from what I can tell. So how they are received is how they are displayed. Hopefully it's user error on my part. As an example, if someone uploads 30 photos of little Johnnys birthday part then that's all they see until the next batch of received photos. I'd prefer they were more random to keep it interesting. Still, exactly what I wanted and happy with the purchase.

I work on a computer at my fulltime job and can pretty much figure out how to do everything, but THIS No. It offers weather updates, but apparently only in Bangor, Maine. You cannot change the location. You can upload photos, but cannot manually scan through them. How can you give this as a gift if YOU cant figure out how to use it. Im sure there is something better out there, Ill keep looking. WASTE of money. Description says holds 5000 photos yet the Box said it held 1000 photos and when I went to load photos it would only accept 50 photos max. I contacted company and they were not much help. They Said it must be a "manufacture error." Needless to say they were great about offering a refund so I mailed the frame back today. I see the frame is no longer available so I wonder if many of us had this issue and they pulled the product. Great concept but 50 photos max didnt suit my needs. But I'm very glad I purchased this. It's very nice quality and it comes with a white insert that you can put around the screen if you would rather have that over the black insert. Screen is touch screen, and everything is very easy to set up. It has step by step instructions when you first start it up, or it comes with an instruction book as well. It can be set up in less than 5 minutes. If you aren't tech savvy, have your children or grandchildren help you. I can't wait to give this to my in laws for Christmas, who are recently first time grandparents. After Christmas we are going to purchase one for ourselves! It was easy to set up and to load pictures via email. I wish I could upload more than 9 pictures at a time tho, and I also wish it would upload the pictures to the frame in the orientation of how the picture was loaded. I had to rotate pictures once uploaded in the frame which was kind of annoying. Easy to figure out if you're tech savvy but I can see the elderly having a hard time to figure it out. Otherwise, great product for the price. I was hoping they'd be user friendly.

These are idiot proof!!!! I love them! Super easy to set up and if GreatGrandma insists on touching the screen and messes things up, I set it so that after 30 seconds it goes back to the pictures. It's a fun way to share pictures with grandparents who aren't on social media. Super easy to get set up. Only slight downfall is that it is plug in only, wish it was chargeable so it could be easily passed around. The display is nice and materials are quality. Show more After our latest round of testing, the Aura Mason remains our top pick. The Nixplay 2K Smart Photo Frame 9.7 inch is now our recommendation for people who want to display photos from services such as Instagram and Facebook. Show less Your guide Brendan Nystedt Share this review A digital photo frame can serve as a direct link between you and family members, letting you send new photos they can admire on their mantle—no matter how far away they live. Whether you're giving a frame as a gift and plan to upload photos remotely, or just want a great frame for yourself, the Aura Mason is a fantastic option. Its 8.57inch display is sharp, bright, and vivid, and in our tests it was the simplest frame to set up. On top of that, the design looks great, making it easy to bring into your home. Our pick Aura Mason The best digital photo frame The Aura Mason's easy setup, minimalist functionality, vivid display, and pleasing design make it stand out.

The process of setting it up and remotely loading photos is a breeze the free Aura app works with Android and iOS phones. Due to its dependence on Aura's app, it's not the best choice for those who want to upload photos directly from their preferred cloud storage and social media services—for that we recommend the Nixplay Smart Photo Frame. But what the Aura Mason lacks in functionality it makes up for with simplicity From the intuitive design of the app to the frame's pared-down interface, the Mason is straightforward to set up and use, and not just for the tech savvy. Advertisement Also great Nixplay 2K Smart Photo Frame 9.7 inch A larger frame to stream Instagram and Facebook photos We love the Nixplay Smart Photo Frame's high-resolution 9.7inch screen and its ability to grab photos from many Web-based services, such as Instagram and Facebook. If you want a larger screen or the flexibility of accessing your social media photos, the latest-generation Nixplay 2K Smart Photo Frame 9.7 inch is a great choice. Nixplay's impressive software suite, combined with the frame's excellent, 9.7inch high-resolution display, makes it a nice alternative to the Aura Mason. Although some of its features aren't the easiest to access, it does let you grab photos from popular photo and social media services like Facebook, Instagram, and Flickr, which the Aura can't manage. Everything we recommend Our pick Aura Mason The best digital photo frame The Aura Mason's easy setup, minimalist functionality, vivid display, and pleasing design make it stand out. The research Collapse all Why you should trust me How we picked How we tested Our pick Aura Mason Flaws but not dealbreakers Also great Nixplay 2K Smart Photo Frame 9.7 inch Potentially free alternatives The competition Why you should trust me I've been an enthusiast photographer and a writer covering consumer electronics and tech for the better part of a decade.

I've worked for Wirecutter, Reviewed, and Wired, and I've done freelance writing for numerous other outlets. While preparing for this guide, I consulted reviews both from owners and from trustworthy outlets such as PCMag and Digital Trends. Unfortunately for the layperson shopping for these devices, there are many SEO-driven clickbait blogs offering up zero-calorie or hands-on reviews. We ignored those websites. I also consulted the previous version of our guide to call back the models we liked in the past if those picks were still available. I went through owner reviews, looked for top sellers in the category, and generally tried to suss out which frames and manufacturers were worth a closer look. Previous research indicated that Wirecutter readers were most interested in digital frames measuring 8 to 11 inches diagonal. This display size makes the most sense as it's significantly bigger than the average phone screen yet small enough for you to tuck the frame away in a corner or to set it atop a bookcase. Style is subjective, but it was also a factor, albeit a minor one, in our decision-making process. A display's aspect ratio is important to consider. For example, 16:9 frames are often too narrow for showing most digital photos without pillarboxing the image putting black bars on either side. Additionally, we looked at each screen's resolution. When even most smartphone cameras can shoot at least 10-megapixel images, it hardly makes sense for us to test anything below a 1080p display which equates to a measly 2 megapixels. We looked at more than a dozen of the top frames and then winnowed down the pool, according to the above criteria, to eight frames for testing the Aluratek 7 Inch Digital Photo Frame, Aura Mason, Aura Sawyer, MRQ 10.1 Inch Digital Photo Frame, Nixplay 2K Smart Photo Frame 9.7 inch, Nixplay Smart Photo Frame 10.1 inch, PixStar FotoConnect 10, and Skylight Frame. How we tested We put each digital picture frame through a battery of tests.

While examining everything from the setup process and display quality to the design, ease of use, and even the quality of automatic brightness adjustment, I took notes on each frame's strengths and weaknesses. Then I uploaded to each frame an identical set of 86 photos from my library, from portraits to architectural shots, taken with phones and digital cameras. In my own home, I installed the frames in a handful of locations to gauge the clarity, brightness, and glare in different ambient lighting. I also made sure to look at each frame both straight in front of them and at increasingly oblique angles to see if the contrast decreased or whether any of the colors shifted. This process also helped me gauge ease of installation and any possible snags with the required power adapter. Additionally, I installed the top two contenders at a family member's home across town so that I could test remote control of the frames. Our pick Aura Mason Photo Rozette Rago Our pick Aura Mason The best digital photo frame The Aura Mason's easy setup, minimalist functionality, vivid display, and pleasing design make it stand out. You go through the entire process on your Android or iOS device, no clunky remote required, and setup includes the option of inviting family members and friends to view and upload pictures. If you're primarily a phone photographer, you'll have your pictures up on this frame in a relatively short amount of time. Aura's software helps you easily set up the Aura Mason as a gift. Using the app, scan a QR code on the box to pair it with your account. That lets you invite family members to contribute photos before the recipient unpacks the frame and plugs it in. You can also have the frame shipped from Aura directly and use the company's email setup process to associate it with your account while it's in transit. Though we didn't try the gift-setup methods ourselves, we do appreciate Aura's focus on the gift angle.
